Q & A

How is this Fund different from other Bond funds?

The fund is specifically designed to provide an innovative fixed income strategy for a period of rising interest rates or a bear market in traditional bonds (rising yields). The fund's top priority is to help preserve capital in a market where a lot of asymmetric risk currently exists given yields are close to 300 year low compared to equities.

What is your competitive edge with regards to FRNs?

Floating Rate Notes are issued by financial institutions and governments and typically have a two-to-five year term to maturity. FRNs make up a significant component of the US investment grade bond market and usually more popular with investors when interest rates are expected to increase. Compared to fixed-rate debt instruments, floaters can protect investors against a rise in interest rates due to the traditional inverse relationship with bond prices.

What is your equity selection process?

The Fund only invests in Blue Chip high yielding equities. There is no small company risk or stocks that do not pay a dividend.

How do you divide research responsibilities in the team?

Ian Williams has overall management responsibilities for the Fund – his expertise is well respected in the fixed income sector having managed top performing Gilt Funds in his career. Terry Farrow has in-depth Institutional experience having run the FRN desk at Standard Chartered Bank. He also harnesses experience reviewing the broader global macro backdrop to International markets.

What type of investors would this appeal to?

The Fund should appeal to any investor who has a requirement to hold Bonds but wants to minimise the potential losses should a bear market in bonds develop.

What are the risks?

Like all bond funds, the value of this investment and the income from it can go down as well as up. Past performance should not be a guide to future performance as market conditions, inflation, changes in interest rates can affect investor returns.
